How to review question blocks efficiently

By: Yvonne Tyler, MD

It is common in my work with students to hear that reviewing practice questions takes up a lot of precious study time. This can even cause students to put off doing questions all together! If this sounds familiar, try out this question review method below. Students can expect to decrease their question review time substantially using this method:

1. Review only the incorrect questions. The correct ones are right because you knew the information and/or have great test taking skills, don't question it!
2. Skip to the educational objective. When reviewing questions, quickly look over your answer choice and the correct answer choice and then scroll down to the "educational objective" usually at the end of an answer explanation --this gives you the take away from that question. Consider making a flashcard if a small detail is tested
3. Keep a to- do list. If further review is needed, then mark it down on a to do list. Plan to review your to do list at a later time.
